ALL ON THE LINE (A BLACKWOLF HOT SHOTS EROTIC NOVELLA) BY EMMA JAY PDF

Jaci Nichols thinks nothing can make her feel as alive as fighting wildfires--man against nature, standing up to danger every day.

Until her crew chief, Cal Sinclair, kisses her after a close call on the fire line.

Wow.

Now she's craving more, but he wants to keep his distance.

Cal Sinclair doesn't want to screw up his first year as crew chief, so he keeps his distance from the members of his hot shot crew. Hard to do when the sexy rookie gets under his skin. Something about her draws him, and makes him want to put it All on the Line.

Excerpt:

Camp was quiet when they rolled in, but not sleeping, never sleeping, not with the odd comings and goings of the crews. When the Blackwolves rolled out of the truck, some headed straight for the mess, others for tents. Jaci, he saw, headed for the showers. He considered taking the same path, but his growling stomach had other ideas. He'd chosen not to eat his last MRE in anticipation of real cooking. He stumbled instead toward the mess.

Wildland firefighting ate up a lot of calories. Otherwise he'd never consider eating biscuits and gravy and pancakes and eggs and sausage. He sat at one of the long picnic tables and admired the abundance of food on the tray before him before he dug in.

He was halfway through his pancakes and halfway toward stuffed when the bench across from him creaked. He looked up to see Jaci, shiny and clean, wearing her Blackwolf t-shirt but apparently no bra. He'd thought he was too tired to have a reaction, but his dick had other ideas.

"You smell good," he murmured.

"Better than you," she teased. "Did you eat all of that?" She pointed to the empty plates on his tray.

"Was hungry."

"Is it good?"

He shoved the tray with its half-eaten stack of pancakes toward her. "Not bad."

She took a bite. "Not bad," she agreed.

"The line's open. You can get your own tray."

She shook her head, folded her arms on the table, and lowered her head to them, like a kid in trouble at school. "Too tired to chew."

Yet she was here instead of her own tent. He lifted a brow in question. She sighed and sat up, then dragged his tray closer, used his fork and took a dainty bite. Then another. Then polished off his pancakes, sopping them through every last drop of syrup. She looked up and grinned, her lips sticky and so damned appealing. He wanted to lean across the table and lick the syrup from her mouth.

"Want more?"

"I'm good. Thanks." She blinked sleepily and rose on a stretch that lifted her shirt and showed her belly.

"You might want to hit the showers while you have a chance."

He was so damned tired he had decided to skip a shower, but knew he'd sleep better after one. "We head out again at three.”

She grimaced and stepped over the bench. “Okay. See you.”

She stumbled away, so tired he hoped she could find her tent.

All on the Line by Emma Jay

By NReads

Recently, I've read a few books that has left me feeling kind of blah (that's the only way to describe it). I'm glad I stumbled upon this book on my Kindle. What a pleasant surprise All on the Line turned out to be. I have a weakness for heroes in a uniform and Cal Sinclair didn't disappoint. Also, the heroine, Jaci, was a firefighter and I thought she was pretty kick ass. She was also a two year survivor of cancer and I adored her for living life.

Furthermore, I loved diving into the exciting, yet dangerous world of these firefighting men and women. I appreciated the vivid descriptions that the author provided and the dash of suspense. The story was well-paced. The characters were also in-depth which was quite surprising considering how short the story is (Kindle Location 806). The characters were engaging and easy to like. The chemistry sizzled between Cal and Jaci and their relationship felt natural without being rushed. The abundance of chemistry led to sizzling sex scenes and let me just say that the sex was on fire! (no pun intended). Emma Jay sure knows how to write a sexy scene ;)

The only minor complaint that I have is that the ending ended a bit too abruptly. This story ended on a happily-for-now (HFN) which I have no issues with. My minor complaint is that I felt that the ending of the story ended in the middle of a scene. I would loved it if the ending was stretched out a bit to make the story feel more complete.

Despite that, All on the Line was well put together. I enjoyed it very much and was entertained all the way through. I hope this is a series because I would love to read about the other men on the team. Emma Jay is a new-to-me author and I'm so glad to have found a new author to read!

Would watch out for this author

By CJoyYC

I got this free on Amazon for a limited time and it was right up my alley.

This is a hot erotic contemporary short about Jaci and Cal. The author provided background for both characters, enough for the readers to understand a bit of history.

Jaci is a rookie hot shot whom Cal saved in one of the dangerous situations. I don't want to spoil anything about her history but it makes sense that she wants to be a firefighter. Cal is new crew chief who seems young for the job but has enough experience to do so. They've been fighting the attraction for awhile and it took one life and death situation for them to get together.

The scenes between them were really hot, there's the right amount of everything and both gave us good as they got. Emma Jay is an author to watch out for.
