Poems for Night People.

By Karina Woolslayer

This is the type of poetry that I look for. Dark and gritty. About bones and blood and the terror of one's own mind. I think a lot of people give up when they realize most poetry is about love and walks in the woods. But there's poetry like this too. Poetry that talks about alternative lifestyles and mental illness and just not being able to get out of bed.

Timely and genuine. Poems that never take themselves too seriously, and in that way are extra cutting when you find them to be as truthful as they are.

Poetry for the Soul

By No Publicity

I loved the poetry. It was so visceral and real - and I nearly cried with at least one, because some of this stuff touched home for me
