Good read for startup founders

By Peter Thomson

An excellent summary of things that an early stage startup founder needs to know about raising capital. Carlos has done a great job of pulling everything together in one place. Personally, I would have enjoyed a little bit more of Carlos' hard-hitting and opinionated style from his blog and public speaking.

The section on startup valuation is extremely helpful for founders trying to value their startup before asking for outside investment. Great stuff.

Must Read for Founders... and investors

By Peter Fry

This is an excellent guide to fundraising. Every founder should read it.

It is clearly written, conversational, backed up with great stories and underpinned with sound philosophy - the short section "The Tao of Fundraising" alone is worth a donation to one of Carlos' recommended charities (the price of the book).

Read, act, learn, iterate.

Not exactly what I was looking for, but I can't fault them for that. They were looking for a different audience of people starting their own business and needing funds for that. It's not about charity type fundraising. But the info is pretty good. Some of it is very basic and obvious, but maybe that is necessary and/or appeals to some. As the book goes along, there are more details about how much money to raise (as much as you can) and many ideas about how to get what you need. It's not a book I'd tell everyone about, but it's a good read and I think it would be helpful.
